I'm bothered by something... the hole that would be dug if the expansion were approved... somehow it seems like it would have been approved without ever been examined for its impacts. Staff asserting that the impacts of digging can't be considered... who ever did? It seems common sense that the Board of Commissioners approved the hole - it's their signature on the paper that allows the hole to be dug - they are responsible for its impacts, therefore, it seems to me. I don't think the law quoted is actually comparable to this situation.
